MEMORANDUM OF DECISION SUSTAINING OBJECTION TO EXEMPTION

This case is before the court on the Chapter 7 Trustee's Objection to Exemption ("Objection") [Doc. #22] and his memorandum in support [Doc. #27]. The court held a hearing on the Objection at which the Trustee and Debtor's Attorney both appeared in person. For the reasons that follow, the Trustee's Objection will be sustained.

FACTUAL BACKGROUND

The relevant facts are not in dispute. Debtor is a single parent of five children. She filed her Chapter 7 petition on November 5, 2008. Debtor's amended Schedule B shows personal property that includes her combined interest in state and federal income tax refunds in the total amount of $3,705.64.¹ On her amended Schedule C, Debtor claims as exempt $3,387.09 of this amount. Specifically, she claims exemptions of $2,000.00 under Ohio Revised Code § 2329.66(A)(9)(g), $312.09 under Ohio Revised Code § 2329.66(A)(3), and $1,075.00 under Ohio's "wildcard" exemption, Ohio Revised Code § 2329.66(A)(18).

¹ Debtor's state and federal income tax refunds total $4,664.00. Both Debtor and the Chapter 7 Trustee calculate the pro rata portion that is property of the estate to be $3,705.64.

On her 2008 federal tax return, Debtor claims two of her minor children as dependents. Her tax return shows a total tax liability of $731.00 after deducting on line 52 of Form 1040 a child tax credit of $2,000.00. Debtor nevertheless was entitled to a tax refund in the amount of $4,194.00, which amount is the difference between the federal income tax withheld from her wages in the amount of $4,925.00 and the $731.00 tax liability.

The Trustee objects to Debtor's claimed exemption under § 2329.66(A)(9)(g) in the tax refund for the child tax credit, which he characterizes as a non-refundable credit. Debtor's position is that because the Ohio exemption statute does not distinguish between a non-refundable and a refundable child tax credit, she is entitled to the claimed exemption.

LAW AND ANALYSIS

As authorized by 11 U.S.C. § 522(b)(2), the Ohio legislature opted out of the federal exemptions provided in § 522(d). See Ohio Rev. Code § 2329.662. As a result, debtors for whom the applicable exemption law under § 522(b)(3)(A) is Ohio law must claim exemptions under the relevant Ohio statutes and under applicable non-bankruptcy federal law. Ohio exemption law applies to Debtor as she has been domiciled in this state for more than the 730 days preceding the date of the filing of her petition. See 11 U.S.C. § 522(b)(3)(A); Doc. # 1, p. 31, SOFA question 15. Effective September 30, 2008, the Ohio exemption statute was amended and a provision was added that allows debtors to exempt their interest in “[p]ayments under section 24 or 32 of the ‘Internal Revenue Code of 1986’” Ohio Revised Code § 2329.66(A)(9)(g).

Section 32 of the Internal Revenue Code deals with the earned income tax credit while section 24 deals with the federal child tax credit. See 26 U.S.C. §§ 24 and 32. At issue in this case is the child tax credit that allows parents with an adjusted gross income below a threshold amount to claim a tax credit of $1,000 for each qualifying child under the age of 17.² 26 U.S.C. § 24(a). The credit has both non-refundable and refundable components. The non-refundable portion of the credit is limited by the amount of tax otherwise owed by the taxpayer and serves only to reduce that tax in determining the taxpayers total tax liability. Id. § 24(b)(3). A refundable portion, referred to as the additional child tax credit, is available only if a debtor's tax liability is less than the total available child tax credit (i.e. $1,000 per qualifying child). It is then allowed in an amount that is the lesser of the remaining child tax credit available to the taxpayer or 15% of the amount by which the taxpayer's earned income exceeds a certain sum.³ Id. § 24(d). This refundable portion, while not defined as a tax overpayment by the Internal Revenue Code, see Law v. Stover (In re Law), 336 B.R. 780, 783 (B.A.P. 8th Cir. 2006), is nevertheless treated as a tax overpayment in that taxpayers receive the refundable amount as a tax refund.

In this case, Debtor filed her bankruptcy petition on November 5, 2008. The court subsequently granted the Trustee's motion for turnover and ordered Debtor to turnover all non-exempt portions of her 2008 income tax refunds. [Doc. # 12]. As discussed above, Debtor claims as exempt $3,387.09 of her total federal and state income tax refunds, including an exemption under Ohio Revised Code § 2329.66(A)(9)(g) in the amount of $2,000.00. Because Debtor's tax liability was greater than the $2,000.00 available child tax credit, the entire credit was non-refundable. The Trustee's Objection requires the court to interpret the new Ohio exemption statute and determine whether § 2329.66(A)(9)(g) provides an exemption for the non-refundable child tax credit. The Trustee has the burden of proving by a preponderance of the evidence that an exemption should be disallowed. See Fed. R. Bankr. P. 4003(c); In re McCashen, 339 B.R. 907, 909 (Bankr. N.D. Ohio 2006).

The Ohio courts have not addressed this new (to Ohio) exemption yet. In the absence of state law interpreting this exemption, this court must attempt to predict how the Ohio Supreme Court would rule if confronted by the same issue. Baumgart v. Alam (In re Alam), 359 B.R. 142, 147 (B.A.P. 6th Cir. 2006). In doing so, the court may rely upon, among other sources, "persuasive opinions from other jurisdictions. Id. (quoting Welsh v. U.S., 844 F.2d 1239, 1245 (6th Cir. 1988)).

The Ohio Supreme Court has previously adopted the general rule that exemption statutes are to be construed liberally in favor of the debtor. See, e.g., Daugherty v. Cent. Trust Co. of Northeastern Ohio, N.A., 28 Ohio St. 3d 441, 504 N.E.2d 1100, 1103 (1986). It is also clear, however, that the Ohio Supreme Court strongly expects that when interpreting an Ohio statute a court's "inquiry begins with the statutory text, and ends there as well if the text is unambiguous." State ex rel. Plain Dealer Publishing Co. v. Cleveland, 106 Ohio St. 3d 70, 76-77 (2005). Thus, the court believes that the Ohio Supreme Court would find in interpreting the instant exemption statute, like any other statute, that the plain meaning of the statutory text, if there be such, will not give way to more general equitable and other considerations in favor of debtors. See In re Malsch, 400 B.R. 584, 593 (Bankr. N.D. Ohio 2008). In other words, the acknowledged general

³ For the year 2008, Congress reduced the amount of income a taxpayer must earn in order to be eligible for the additional child tax credit to $8,500. Emergency Economic Stabilization Act of 2008, Sec. 501, Pub. L. 110-343, 122 Stat. 3765, 3876.

“liberalization” of the Ohio exemption statutes through the Ohio Legislature’s 2008 amendments is reflected in the terms and dollar amounts it chose to accomplish its legislative goals.

Section 2329.66(A)(9)(g) provides an exemption for a person’s interest in “[p]ayments under section 24... of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986.” (emphasis added). The Trustee argues that under the plain terms of the statute the only “payment” under § 24 in which Debtors have any interest is the refundable portion of the child tax credit. The court agrees.

While the court is aware of no cases that have addressed the precise issue presented in this case, bankruptcy courts have addressed the child tax credit in other contexts. This is for the most part case law that was extant when the Ohio statute was amended. Some courts have considered whether and to what extent the child tax credit constitutes property of the bankruptcy estate and have concluded that the refundable portion of the credit is property of the estate. See In re Matthews, 380 B.R. 602, 606-08 (Bankr. M.D. Fla. 2007); In re Minton, 348 B.R. 467, 475 (Bankr. S.D. Ohio 2006); In re Law, 336 B.R. 144, 146 (Bankr. W.D. Mo. 2005), aff’d 336 B.R. 780 (B.A.P. 8th Cir. 2006). But see In re Schwartz, 314 B.R. 433 (Bankr. D. Neb. 2004) (finding that the child tax credit is after-acquired property and, therefore, is not property of the estate). These courts distinguish between the nature of the non-refundable portion of the child tax credit and the refundable portion, finding that a debtor’s contingent interest in the future payment of the refundable portion of the child tax credit is property of the estate. See In re Mathews, 380 B.R. at 608; In re Minton, 348 B.R. at 474-75; In re Law, 336 B.R. at 146. By contrast, the non-refundable portion “is simply a reduction against the amount of tax liability.” In re Matthews, 380 B.R. at 605.

Similarly, courts have found the distinction between the refundable and non-refundable portions of the child tax credit crucial in determining whether the credit is exempt under state law as a form of public assistance or in the nature of a child support allowance or other maintenance. See In re Parker, 352 B.R. 447, 454 (Bankr. N.D. Ohio 2006) (holding that the refundable portion is nonexempt estate property but the non-refundable portion is simply a reduction against the amount of tax liability); In re Koch, 299 B.R. 523, 527 (Bankr. C.D. Ill. 2003) (stating that the “key factor is the refundability of the credit” and concluding that “[i]f a credit is not refundable, further inquiry need not be made”); In re Dever, 250 B.R. 701, 704, 706 (Bankr. D. Idaho 2000) (finding that the debtors were not entitled to an exemption in the amount of the non-refundable child tax credit since they had no claim to the amount of the credit other than in using it to reduce tax liability).

The court is persuaded by the distinctions made in the above cases and finds dispositive of the issue presented in this case the determination as to whether the tax credit at issue is property of Debtor’s bankruptcy estate. As a general proposition, exemptions are designed to permit debtors to retain properties that are deemed necessary for their support and the support of their dependents. In re Stevenson, 374 B.R. 891, 894 (Bankr. M.D. Fla. 2007). Absent an available exemption claimed by a debtor in a Chapter 7 case, all of the debtor's legal or equitable interests in property as of the commencement of the bankruptcy case become property of the estate that is subject to collection and liquidation by the trustee and to distribution in payment of claims in accordance with the Bankruptcy Code. 11 U.S.C. §§ 541, 704, 726. To the extent that the non-refundable child tax credit is not property of the estate and is, therefore, not subject to collection and liquidation by the Trustee, Debtor cannot claim it as an exemption from property of the estate. See 11 U.S.C. 522(b)(1) (providing that a "debtor may exempt from property of the estate" property as set forth in that statute); In re Law, 336 B.R. at 146 (stating that the issue of whether a debtor can claim an exemption in the child tax credit is moot unless the credit is first considered property of the bankruptcy estate).

In this case, Debtor could only use the child tax credit to offset her income tax liability. The entire credit was, therefore, non-refundable. She has no interest in a "payment" from the federal government in the amount of this portion of the statutory credit. As one court explained, although the non-refundable credit may facilitate a refund where prior payments or withholdings are in an amount greater than the tax liability net of the credit, the credit itself is never recoverable as a refund by taxpayers. See In re Dever, 250 B.R. at 706. As such, the non-refundable child tax credit is not property of the estate and cannot be subject to collection and distribution by the Trustee. Debtor has already obtained the benefit of the entire child tax credit when she used the credit to reduce her tax liability. She cannot also use the credit to insulate part of her tax refund from use by the Trustee for the benefit of her unsecured creditors. See In re Dever, 250 B.R. at 706.

Debtor's income tax refund in the amount of $4,194.00, which is indisputably property of the estate, consists only of the funds withheld from her wages. Debtor having no interest in a "payment" with respect to the non-refundable child tax credit and no claim with respect to the credit other than in using it to reduce her tax liability, the court concludes that the non-refundable credit is not property of Debtor's bankruptcy estate that she may separately exempt under § 2329.66(A)(9)(g) as a "payment" to her.

According to both Debtor and the Trustee, Debtor's prepetition pro rata portion of her federal and state income tax refund is $3,705.64. Subtracting from this amount the sum of the other valid exemptions claimed by Debtor on Schedule C, including the balance of the exemption provided under § 2329.66(A)(3) in the amount of $312.09⁴ and the “wildcard” exemption under § 2329.66(A)(18) in the amount of $1,075.00, the court finds that $2,318.55 of Debtor’s combined 2008 federal and state income tax refunds is non-exempt property of the estate and must be turned over to the Trustee.

A separate order in accordance with this memorandum of decision will be entered by the court.

⁴ Ohio Revised Code § 2329.66(A)(3) permits debtors to exempt their interest, not to exceed $400 in “cash on hand, money due and payable, money to become due within ninety days, tax refunds, and money on deposit with a bank. . . .” On her Schedule C, Debtor claimed exemptions in the amount of $10.00 in cash on hand and $77.91 as to her interest in a Promedica Federal Credit Union checking account, leaving a balance of $312.09 that is available as an exemption with respect to her income tax refunds.
